LOCA LINDA = CRAZY BEAUTIFUL

Region

Sitting at 3,281ft above sea level, Valle de Famatina, La Rioja, is an isolated wine-producing region north of the city of Mendoza. The region is known for producing floral and aromatic white wines from the Torrontes grape.

Soil and Climate

Soils are alluvial deposits of sand and stone. Snow from the Andes melts and concentrates in the valley. Intense solar exposure during the day and cold nights allow for the development of flavor and the balance of acidity.

Winemaking

Grapes harvested in the second and third week of February. We make an early pick/press of a small amount of fruit and blend it back into the primary lot to get a boost of natural acidity and tempered aromatics. The result is an incredible example of what this grape can deliver.

Sunshine in a glass With limited rainfall in the region, the sky is almost always blue and the sun almost always shining. With the high altitude, the solar radiation increases allowing the growing season to extend. This extension lets the grapes mature to their full potential.
